Learning Styles

Learning Styles to me are important, especially since I have a learning disability. They help me better understand things. For Me I learn better with Visual and tactile learning because being able to see the process then trying it on my own is just the way I learned how to process different information. I can read information and take it in, but it's not as effective as seeing it unfold right in front of me. Maybe learning styles doesn't matter to some people, but it matters to me. I've had a hard time learning without seeing a visual representation of what I'm supposed to learn. I think learning styles can affect some people and the way they learn and take in information, but I don't think that applies to everyone though.
